PRESENTED WITH WATCH

Workmen Honor Their Former Employer.

COLONEL GEO. CHRISTIAN

Victim of Very Pleasant Surprise Saturday Evening.

Men of Norris and Christian Quarries Give Retiring Member of Firm Beautiful Presents.

As a token of respect and affection which they bear him, respect and affection resulting from years of association as employer, and employee, the workmen of the Norris and Christian quarries Saturday evening presented George B. Christian, the founder of the industry, with a beautiful Swiss watch. Mr. Christian recently retired from active participation in the affairs of this business, which he made one of the most successful in Marion county.

Mr. Christian's meeting with his men at the company's office on the fifth floor of the Huber clock was characterized by a spirit of good feeling that so rarely exists between an employer and the men who work for him. For Mr. Christian it was a complete and most pleasurable surprise. The men, about 100 in number, assembled at the office early in the evening and a telephone message was sent summoning Mr. Christian there on important business. When he stepped into the main room of the office apartments, it was literally jammed with big, sturdy quarrymen, the men whose brawn and honest industry had been the chief factor in making the lime and stone business here one of the county's greatest enterprises.

Mr. Christian was met at the door by George D. Copeland, a life-long friend.

Realizing that this was hardly the real reason for the meeting, Mr. Christian smiled and said he would be glad to do what he could.

Mr. Copeland delivered the speech preliminary to presenting the watch which had been purchased with contributions furnished by the men. He spoke for about half an hour, reviewing the eventful life of Mr. Christian from the time that he started out as a soldier in the Civil War, offering his life, if necessary, for the salvation of his country, going over his career as a school teacher, as a contractor who built Marion county's first pike and who superintended the construction of some of the city's first business blocks, telling of how he launched the lime and stone business and how he made it a success.

The Norris and Christian quarries, Mr. Copeland said, were started on $500 borrowed capital and it was only by dint of hard work and genius that the venture resulted in ultimate success.

The watch, a valuable timepiece costing $70, was accepted by Mr. Christian in a speech that was notable in many respects. Not only was it a fitting farewell to the men who had so long been closely associated with the speaker but it was a message containing good wholesome advice for the hardy sons of toil who comprised the audience.

Mr. Christian said that he had always tried to give his men a square deal and believed that he had in the main succeeded. He told of how he and the men associated with him had managed to bridge over the hard times of 1893 and furnished their men with employment so that they scarcely felt the slightest hardships.

"For this I deserve no credit," said Mr. Christian. "It was no more than right."

"I believe that between us there has always existed a feeling that has been something more than the ordinary feeling between the employer and the man working for his hire," said Mr. Christian. "It has seemed as though we were always looking for a common good."

The speaker said that he realized that the lot in life of the men before him is hard. "But," he said, "you have the satisfaction of knowing that what you get you earn, what you get you pay for with a good day's work."

The quarrymen of Marion, taken as a whole, Mr. Christian said, comprise a part of our best citizenship. They endure great hardships and for the most part are underpaid. Yet there is one great recompense for their toil, he said. This is in the fact that life in the open air gives them health and muscle.

In closing, Mr. Christian urged the men to live uprightly and prudently. He pleaded with them to shun strong drink and to devote their earnings to the welfare and happiness of their families.

"No man can be successful and spend his earnings in dissipation," said the speaker. "The wave of prohibition that is now spreading over this country will eventually sweep everything before it and the nation will be free of the liquor traffic."

"And now I want to thank you sincerely for this token of your regard for me," said Mr. Christian, holding out the watch given by the men. "I will treasure this as a memento of my association with you, and when I look into its face I will see the faces of all the men who have toiled for me. I will keep it so that it may be handed down from generation to generation."

Following Mr. Christian's speech, the men, at his request, met him personally for a farewell handshaking. It was a love-feast in which true affection was manifest throughout.

LECTURE A RARE TREAT

Large Audience Hears Dr. Green.

"DRAMA IN THREE ACTS"

Subject of the Masterly Effort of Orator.

A Large Audience of Men Present Sunday Afternoon at the Y. M. C. A. Enjoys Discourse.

Dr. Thomas E. Green one of the most noted dramatic lecturers on the American platform, addressed a magnificent body of men in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium yesterday afternoon. It was the first time in many years when such a distinguished orator has been secured to speak at a Sunday afternoon men's meeting and the intelligent audience that assembled demonstrated that the men of the city appreciated the opportunity of hearing Dr. Green at his second appearance here.

"A Drama in Three Acts" was the subject upon which the speaker based his lecture. In his opening remarks, he declared that it was a great pleasure to stand before a large body of men especially Y. M. C. A. men, to address them upon a theme of this kind. He said that he had arrived in Columbus yesterday with nothing to do and that he greatly appreciated the opportunity of coming to Marion to speak upon such an occasion. Before plunging into the depths of his lecture, Dr. Green spoke many complimentary remarks about the Y. M. C. A. as an institution for general good.

In the early part of his lecture Dr. Green pictured the life of Jesus. He impressed upon the minds of the audience the beauty, the simplicity and magnanimity of the man's life. The lecturer described Jerusalem, pointed to the lands in which Jesus roamed and then wove a small thread of history in his description by pointing to the country as it is today.

The speaker remarked that the drama which he was about to disclose was the shortest that the world has ever known. He named it as the "Parable of the Human Soul."

Dr. Green drew an imaginative picture of a stage, the curtains, the foot-lights and the harsh and at times sweet strains of the opera orchestra. His leading character was an aged man with flowing beard. He pictured a harvest field where several laborers were toiling. As the curtain rose, there spread out before the audience a magnificent picture of nature in all her glory. "What a wonderful thing nature is," remarked the lecturer. "It will give you everything that you practically need in this world."

In the second scene of the first act the lecturer portrayed the owner of the field appearing upon the scene. His slaves waved their hands at him, the hounds that had returned from hunting the hare through the grain, lured at his feet and licked his hands. He was a much loved man and it seemed that everything on earth revered him.

In the second act, Dr. Green pictured the sun rising over the beautiful home of his character. The old man walked forth and surveyed his crops. He had been prosperous, his fields were laden in grain. As the character gazed upon his rich harvest he realized for the first time in his life that he was really a rich man.

As the story went, the character immediately tore down his small barns and constructed larger ones, and the second act of the lecturer's clever little drama closed by showing the rich man piling up more and more while happiness grew less and less.

"Man is the only creature living on earth that we know anything about that has avarice and real greed in his veins. Even the most hogish hog will eat his belly full and then go away and allow his fellows to eat the remainder of the food unmolested. But man is absolutely the only being who will keep piling up and piling up. When he has a heap so big that he can't reach around it then he'll lay down on top of it and kick and scream to any who dare take a portion from him," said the lecturer.

As the curtain rose upon the third act, Dr. Green pictured a bed chamber. Upon the bed was a broken down man. He was alone. The room though richly furnished was dark. There was no light of life. In impressive language the lecturer portrayed the state of the man's soul.

"So few men can stand prosperity," said the speaker. "In the daily walks of life we see many characters like the one which has been portrayed in the drama. 'Since history began no nation ever died of old age; it was always of rotten hearts,' remarked Dr. Green. 'As long as Greece was poor, she was mighty, but her riches caused her downfall. America's problem of problems today is not can we whip Japan; those little brownies cannot bother us, intelligent though they are. It is the question, Can America stand prosperity and keep her hands pure?"

The lecturer concluded his eloquent oration by illustrating the point that riches are usually closely followed by corruption and sin. His closing remark, "What doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"
